such a calibration since their extrinsic parameters are changing dynamically. It is demonstrated that a simplified classic stereo method can still be used to keep an active head tracking a detected obstacle in real-time, when implemented in parallel. Only disparity information from the stereo matching is used. This avoids accurate camera calibration and in turn leads to the possibility of using the active vision head to do real-time navigation of the mobile vehicle using stereo.

References

